

 MIT CHANGE

UPDATE: Venue change for MIT show.

 BBC INTERVIEW

This email is being sent only to those in the Cambridge area. If you know others coming to the show be sure to let them know the new location.

Change in venue for M.I.T. show

9.15.5 -- Charming Hostess MIT concert now in Building 54.

Charming Hostess, whose music is rooted in the body—voices and vocal percussion, handclaps and heartbeats, sex-breath and silence, will perform a free concert on Friday, September 16 at 8 p.m. in Building 54, room 100. The performance will feature works from their new CD, "Sarajevo Blues" (Tzadik) See the new map. → map

No change to lecture... MIT presents composer and musician Jewlia Eisenberg in the 2005 Katzenstein Lecture: "Sounds Like Home: Voice, Text, and Diaspora Consciousness in Nerdy- Sexy- Commie- Girlieland, A Conversation with Composer/Musician Jewlia Eisenberg" on Thursday, September 15 at 7 p.m. in Room 6-120 , (enter 77 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge)." → map

BBC "The World" interviews Charming Hostess

"The subject of today's Global Hit is a trio of women who call themselves "Charming Hostess." The name summons up a particular image -- proper, oh-so-refined, and careful not to ruffle any feathers. That's not exactly the way you'd describe Charming Hostess. They're sensual, they're smart, and they're radical. Benjamin Temchine of public radio station KALW prepared this report. . . Hear BBC's "The World" interview with Charming Hostess.